Pinakes

Thanks to the prosperity and cultural and economic splendor of southern Italy at the time of the Pythagoreans, during the ancient age the Greek colonies colonized its coasts starting from the eighth century BC. founding Locri Epizephiri and this caused the area to be called Magna Grecia. The Polis of the Mediterranean therefore communicated for five centuries until the rise of Taranto and the submission to Roman rule, sharing history and culture and making the two peninsulas similar.

Still today the sources available in the Mediterranean coasts in common with the same nature, especially the archaeological ones, demonstrating what has been expressed. Beyond the numerous material sources such as the famous Riace Bronzes and the archaeological ones, the Pinakes are among the most numerous spread throughout the Mediterranean coast. They are a painted wooden votive tablet or a bas-relief in terracotta, marble or bronze generally hung on the walls of sanctuaries or on sacred trees in ancient Greece. A few examples in gold have survived from the 7th century BC. made on the island of Rhodes in the Daedalic style and representing divinities, especially Artemis. In Magna Graecia they were produced between 490 and 450 BC. mainly in the poleis of Locri Epizefiri, Metaponto and Hipponion, for this reason a considerable number of specimens of pinakes are kept in the National Museum of Magna Grecia in Reggio Calabria.

Grazie alla prosperità e lo splendore culturale ed economico dell'Italia Meridionale al tempo dei pitagorici, durante l'età antica le colonie greche colonizzarono le sue coste a partire dall'VIII secolo a.C. fondando Locri Epizephiri e questo fece appellare la zona con il nome Magna Grecia. Le Polis del Mediterraneo dunque comunicarono per cinque secoli fino all'ascesa di Taranto e la sottomissione al dominio romano, condividendo storia e cultura e rendendo simili le due penisole.

Tutt'oggi le fonti disponibili nelle coste Mediterranee condividono la stessa natura, specialmente quelle archeologiche, dimostrando quanto espresso. Aldilà delle numerose fonti materiali come i famosi Bronzi di Riace e quelle archeologiche, le Pinakes sono tra le più numerose diffuse in tutta la costa Mediterranea. Esse sono una tavoletta votiva in legno dipinto o un bassorilievo in terracotta, marmo o bronzo generalmente appeso sulle pareti dei santuari o sugli alberi sacri nell'antica Grecia. Sono sopravvissuti alcuni esempi in oro risalenti al VII secolo a.C. realizzati sull'isola di Rodi in stile dedalico e rappresentanti divinità, in particolar modo Artemide. In Magna Grecia furono prodotti tra il 490 e il 450 a.C. principalmente nelle poleis di Locri

Epizefiri, Medma e Hipponion, per questo un considerevole numero di esemplari di pinakes è custodito presso il Museo nazionale della Magna Grecia di Reggio Calabria.
